

Beyond the Daily

Katherine Savage

I dream
of big weather.
To be stirred
by the same currents
that upend houses
and drop them in trees.
To be deprecated
by a riotous excess
of wet and wind.
I want to testify
on my knees
that I am spun,
and swear allegiance
to the god
of impermanence.